

Girl on Fire!

Mickey Sumner (a.k.a. Sting's all-grown-up daughter) is the new film-world darling.

▶ This month's Frances Ha is possibly the best roommate movie ever—thanks to breakout star Mickey Sumner, the 29-year-old daughter of singer Sting and Trudie Styler. The actress, who plays one half of the film's apartment-sharing duo, says she's had her own share of cohabbing nightmares to draw from: "My first year of college, I let a girl stay for a week. Five months later, she was still on my couch." In the movie, Sumner's character, Sophie, is more of the leaving type, ditching her roomie, played by Greta Gerwig, for a better apartment. But Sumner and Gerwig more than survived the on-screen tension. The two had met before (at a party, during a big game of Banana-grams) but got tight during shooting. "I was never close to girls until my twenties," says Sumner. "Now I need my women friends."

Another thing Sumner didn't do until her twenties? Admit that she had the acting bug. "I didn't think I could do it," she says. Times have changed: We'll see her soon in the movie Missed Connections and as rock legend Patti Smith in CBGB. "I was like, Is this really happening?!" she says of the iconic role. "I am blessed." —Megan Angelo

Under the lights in my first acting class, I realized: This is all I want." Jacket, Sacai; jeans, Koral. See Glamour Shopper for more information.
